

To Whom It May Concern

A Jamaican can experience great indifference within the legal system of the United States. Reflecting on Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr and his journey on this earth, some have ignored the good, quality principles he upheld and which concerns us as a people. When official biases cause many pain and hardship, where should we turn? We cannot remain silent any more.

People in many communities accepted and allowed retaliatory programs against good people, as if we are not human beings. Mental and physical abuse have occurred through the years. Illegal practices interfere with meaningful access to courts. The remedy to many illegally incarcerated was to appeal to generous people to provide funds or assist with fundraising to get out of jail and prisons as in "Martin Luther King, Jr." time. Where are the people of good, quality principles? I refuse to believe nobody cares or no one is listening to our urgent cry to help the weak and poor.

I grew up as a Christian, who humbly approached everything with an open mind. My heart allowed me to be sympathetic to others in need. My best teacher was my grandmother, who showed love and was a blessing to many. In memory of her, E. Weir, God bless her soul. In my circumstance, I pray for assistance that is generous, caring and providing meaningful resource leading to change for the better. Living the principle "it is giving that we receive" may help us to be more responsible towards each other.

Won't you please help. God bless.

Sincerely, Lancelot Armstrong,
